I agreed with him that henceforth we would adopt the principle that DPD would finance equipment required for collection operations but would not again (I hope ever) get into the business of financing exploitation equipment to be used by intelligence production components such as OSI and PIC. Dr. Scoville agreed with me on the insatiable and often ill-defended desires of these characters for more and better equipment. He agreed that we should insist, before spending DPD money in the future for improved or additional collection equipment, on thoroughly satisfactory proof of the need.

3. Dr. Scoville hinted at the close of this conversation that if he were to finance read-out equipment in the future he must have sufficient
